cortical cells]. Microtubule filaments (MTs) and plasmalemma are known to interact in cells; we have studied this interaction during the growth of cultured adrenal cortical cells by fluorescence microscopy. We have shown that the microtubule organizing center of the cells was located at the centrosome and that the cortical cells were composed of four populations. The first population of the cells arose from the diffusion of the microtubules and MTs from the centrosome, and the second and the third populations formed due to an interaction between the MTs and the plasmalemma. The fourth and last population was composed of newly differentiated cells. Dietary selenium deficiency affects lipid peroxidation in rat liver. The effect of dietary selenium deficiency on the lipid peroxidation of rat liver homogenate was studied. Male Sprague-Dawley rats were fed a semipurified diet in which selenium was either deficient or adequate for 90 days. After the final selenium treatment, the consumption of selenium by the rats was  $20.6 \pm 0.8$  and  $2.1 \pm 0.1$
